The government introduced legislation in 2017, that requested all employers in the UK with more than 250 employees, are required to comply with the Gender Pay Reporting under the Equality Act 2010 Regulation 2017. This involves carrying out a number of calculations that show the difference between the average earnings of men and women in our organisation.

The results are calculated in a number of ways;

Median Gap: This is calculated by ordering males and females in separate rows from the highest to the lowest in pay. The median is the pay figure in the middle of each group.

Mean Gap: This calculates the difference in pay between men and women in the business.

Pay Quartiles: This outlines how many males and females compare in each quartile pay bracket in the business.
